Kate Kirkwood holds several national and state lead certifications, she is an entrepreneur, is a former college business professor and has been a general business consultant for 30 years.

Her work as an expert in lead poisoning began after hearing about a child who died of lead poisoning in her home state of New Hampshire. She formed an educational company called Lead-EDU through which she offers training and certification, for contractors, landlords, real estate agents, investors and parents.

She is author of a children's' book "Skylar Learns About Lead Poisoning" as well as "A Parent's 5 Step Guide to Lead Poisoning", which is the first in a series called "Lead Paint Clear and Simple". Kate believes the solution to this problem is not complex regulations but rather simple information and caring citizens.

Kate is available through video and live presentations to help your audience understand how lead paint can affect them, their home, their work and their children. Be sure to watch her TEDx talk "Why you should worry about lead poisoning in NEW homes."

Kate is a mother of four children and lives in New Hampshire.
